Project: CSC 317 website project - HTML & CSS

This is our website with CSS -- both inline and with external stylesheets.

Description:

Header and footer do not have underlines, have animated hover effects, search bar has animated color change hover effects, and size has changed.

Footer: contains links which lead to About Us (updated), Locations & Hours (new), FAQ (updated), Returns (new), Subscribe page (new), and social media links (icons which link to the real websites, new).

FAQ page: we overhauled it with CSS--flexboxes, centralized styling (external stylesheets) and inline CSS for specialized elements. It's neat and organized. There is a clickable linking navbar on the left which features hover color-changing animations. The search bar also has hover color-changing animations. The questions have moved from table entries separated by rows and columns to much easier to manage pairs, almost like key-value pairs. Padding made each question and answer spaced out nicely. They have been encapsulated into divs, which contain divs. Questions were separated by titles in their own divs. box-shadow gave each QA pair and the navbar a nice shadow effect. Here, most of the styling has been centralized into a new CSS file called "universal-siteskin.css," which unfortunately contains unused styles and was pressed on time to include comments like the header_footer_styles.CSS (will add these later and removed unused CSS rules! Combined classes helped break out and reuse repeated styles for less repetitive css declarations.

WishList page: newly implemented. On this page, users can choose to add products to their wishlist and save them for the future. This way, they can quickly view what products they were interested in during their previous visits and decide whether or not to purchase the products. In order to create this, our group decided to use a grid where we had 3 columns and multiple rows. For the future, when we could use javascript we want to be able to add new or remove items from the wishlist and be able to move the items up and down on the wishlist so that the user can see what games he is most interested at the top and least at the bottom. Also, based on the users selection of games, we would add a little side bar on the page where we could recommend some other games to the user based on his selection of games on the wishlist.

Office Hours and Locations page: newly implemented. For this page, we used a simple table divided into two columns. One side had the information for the office hours and location while the other had a map with all location of our office. In order to implement this map, we used CSS and embedded the map into our table.

System preferences->purchases page, newly implemented called Order History, WIP not linked to System preferences->purchases page. For this page, we kept it similar to the cart and we used a table. Our group used an external CSS style sheet though to make sure the font size and color is consistent throughout the page and so that it could easily be changed anytime. In the future, we would change this to be more interactive and add more pages so that we would be able to link new pages to return orders or get more order details.

Company info page overhauled. We changed pictures of the team from vertical to horizontal by using the div tag to create image gallery in CSS. When you click on each picture, it will pop up to another window to show full size of the person being selected. Another interesting feature is that all four people's pictures will be automatically adjusted center to the page no matter what the window size is. The old configuration in HTML with pictures vertically was not able to show all four people at the same time.

Subscribe page: newly implemented. We also used div tags to center the content to the middle of the page with the gray background color and the border is cadetblue color in CSS. The Subscribe is bold and in large font to catch viewer's eyes with the purpose paragraph in italic format. The input field is the viewer's email address with the placeholder also in gray. The Subscribe button has multiple color background which uses linear gradient & rgba function for its shadow. When pointer is moved into the button that also shifts up and down with mouse movement which is unusual and eye catching to the user.

Product page: now uses CSS. Contains "frames," has a scrollbar (animated) and clickable image links which link to a frame, which changes the content of the windows. Used tons of flexboxes, absolute height, width to achieve this. Used color background to help with this. All of the CSS is in an external product_page.css stylesheet.

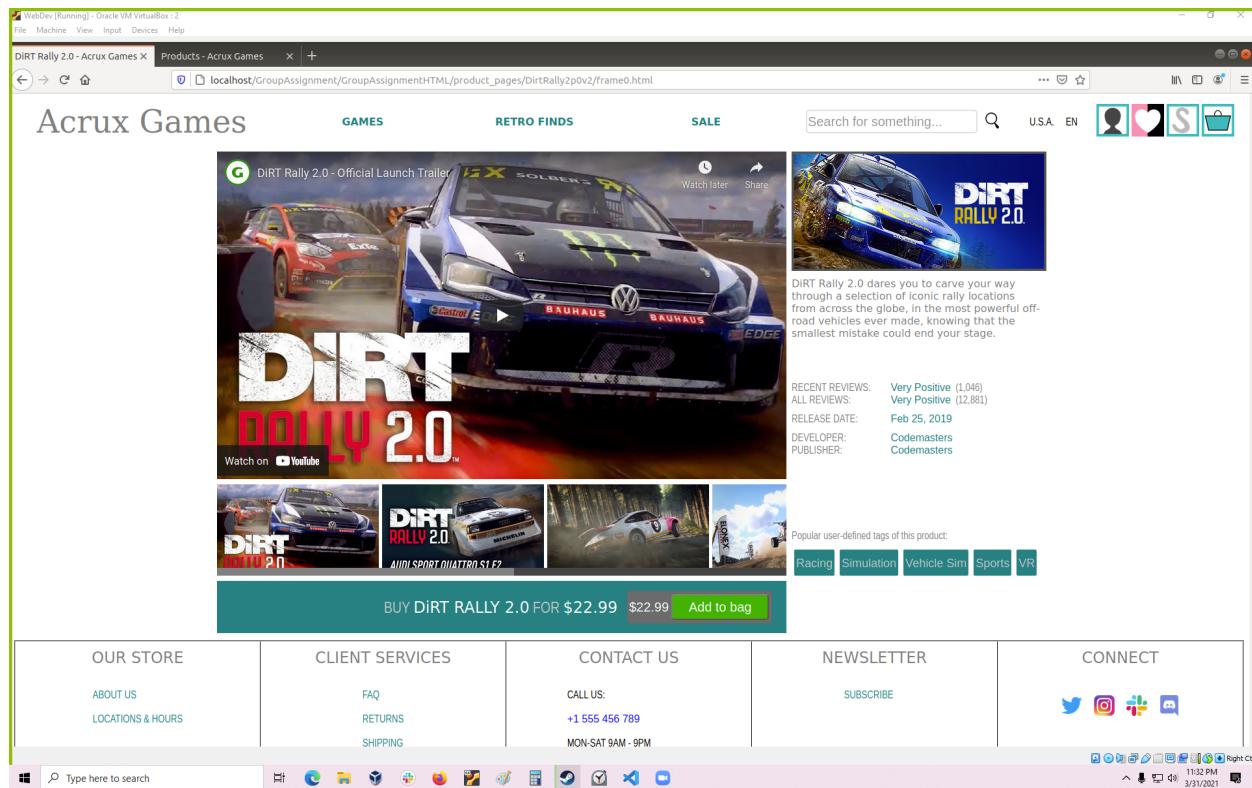

Problems we have:

One problem we encountered was linking pictures of our team to the company info page. It worked on our local computer but did not work in the repo, and we found out the path of the link is different because one of our team members moved the picture to a different folder. To resolve the problem, we had to make changes on our local computer which must be the same as the repo, so it can work both places and there were no issues running the website on different computers.

Another problem we encountered during our project was using the CSS grid and learning how to use it. We ran into a lot of issues when we started to create it but after using some outside resources we began to make it work. Initially creating the grids rows and columns was simple but when we started to align our text in our boxes we ran into a couple of issues. While aligning the text horizontally was simple, we ran into issues aligning the text vertically. In order to implement this, we had to use padding and adjust it accordingly until our text was aligned.
